

Laura Quatela leaving Kodak Personalized Imaging division

Written by Staff reports

Jun. 27

democratandchronicle.com

Laura G. Quatela, president of Eastman Kodak Co.'s Personalized Imaging division, will not go along when when that group is spun off to the pension plan

for United Kingdom employees.

Quatela had managed the sale of non-strategic assets as part of Kodak's Chapter 11 restructuring, said Antonio M. Perez, chairman and CEO of Kodak. "Now that this work is nearly complete, Laura is considering what her next challenge will be, while wanting to provide the future owner, KPP, the opportunity to select the senior executive who will carry the Personalized Imaging and Document Imaging businesses forward," Perez said in a memo to employees.

He said Quatela will continue to manage personalized and document

imaging through the transition to ownership by the UK's Kodak Pension Plan, expected in September.

"I am proud of the tremendous progress we have made during our restructuring, and how our consumer-facing businesses have been positioned to thrive, under new ownership, still with iconic Kodak branding," Quatela said in a statement. "I look forward to completing the work of transitioning the businesses, and then turning to new challenges. I carry deep admiration for the business

teams I have worked with, and wish them every success under KPP ownership."